Reserve Bank does not determine the residential status. Under FEMA, residential status is determined by operation of law. The onus is on an individual to prove his / her residential status, if questioned by any authority.

Q. What is an "NRI account"?

A. "NRI account" is a popular connotation for Indian accounts opened for NRIs. The types of accounts that an NRI can open in India are NRE (Rupee Repatriable) FCNR (Dollar, Pound, Euro, Yen, Canadian dollars & Aus. Dollars) & NRO (Rupee Non Repatriable). US residents may bear in mind that these accounts are not FDIC insured, the income may be subject to US Federal Income Tax and balances in excess of $10,000 may need to be reported annually to the US Department of the Treasury.

Q. Am I eligible to open an "NRI account"?

A. Yes, if you are an NRI or a PIO

Q. What are NRE, FCNR and NRO accounts?

A. NRE account is a Rupee denominated account which is fully repatriable. Funds into this account will have to be received from outside India. You can open either a SB account (liquid account provided with a check book) or a Fixed deposit. The minimum period for an NRE fixed deposit is 12 months.

FCNR accounts can be opened in five different currencies viz., US dollar, Pound Sterling, Euro, Jap Yen, Canadian Dollar & Australian Dollar. They are in the form of fixed deposits only and the minimum period of deposit is 12 months.

NRO account is a Rupee denominated account which is not repatriable. This account is basically for your rupee funds generated in India. You can open either a SB account (liquid account provided with a check book) or a Fixed deposit.

Q. Can I open NRE, FCNR & NRO accounts in joint names?

A. Yes, you can open NRE & FCNR jointly provided the other person is also an NRI. These accounts cannot be jointly held with an Indian resident. NRO accounts can be jointly held with an Indian resident.
